

References, Psychosocial Factors Affecting Wounds Healing

Bermant and Ehman, October 6, 2015

Alexander, Susan J. (2009). Malignant, fungating wounds: managing pain, bleeding, and psychosocial issues. Journal of Wound Care, 18, 418-425.

Alexander, Susan J. (2010). An intense and unforgettable experience: the lived experience of malignant wounds from the perspectives of patients, caregivers, and nurses. International Wound Journal, 7, 456-465.

Alexander, Susan J. (2013). Time to get serious about assessing—and managing—psychosocial issues associated with chronic wounds. Current Opinion Supportive Palliative Care, 7, 95-100.

Edwards, Helen et al. (2005). Chronic venous leg ulcers: effects of a community nursing intervention on pain and healing. Nursing Standard 19, 47-54.

Edwards, Helen et al. (2005a). Improved healing rates for chronic venous leg ulcers: Pilot study results from a randomized controlled trial of a community nursing intervention. International Journal of Nursing Practice, 11, 169-176.

Mohamed, Howyda A., F. Fouad & M.E. Seif (2013). Exploring factors affecting quality of life for patients with chronic venous leg ulcers. Reserarcher, 5, 24-30.
<http://www.sciencepub.net/researcher>.

Ogden, Lesley & S. Honey (2005). Patients' experiences of attending a new community leg ulcer clinic. Journal of Community Nursing, 19, 34-37.

Pearce, Lynn (2003). Join the club. Nursing Standard, 18, 69.

Pragnell, Jane & J. Neilson (2010). The social and psychological impact of hard-to-heal wounds. British Journal of Nursing, 10, 1248-1252.

Shenefelt, Philip D. & D.A. Shenefelt (2014). Spiritual and religious aspects of skin and skin disorders. Psychology Research and Behavior Management 7: 201-212.

Van der Bruggen, Harry (1999). "A leg to stand on": An existential-phenomenological analysis. International Journal of Nursing Practice, 5, 174-183.

